Mahjong Website Creative Brief

Project overview
A five-page, responsive microsite that introduces mahjong to people who have never played it. It is based on the Wikipedia article “Mahjong” but is meant to work as a visual guide, not a rulebook. Visitors should come away knowing what the game is, where it came from, what the tiles are, and how a round works.

Audience
This is a strictly informational site, and won’t be promoted commercially in any way. This will be a part of my portfolio though, so it’s likely that my instructors will see and review it. It’s also likely that prospective employers will see it. Demographic information could be all across the board, but the audience won’t likely include children, or people of higher than retirement age

Message
Mahjong is a living game with a rich history and a lot of variety, and it is easier to understand than it looks. I want to highlight the beauty of the tiles, game, and community. The site should also show that mahjong means different things in different places, from Hong Kong to Japan to the United States.

Tone
Welcome and creative. I want it to feel like a friend teaching you the game at the table. Playful in the details, but clear and respectful about the culture it comes from.

Visual style
Bold, graphic, and clean illustrated tiles on a warm background, with generous space and strong color blocks, not a photo-heavy or textured look. Tiles should be drawn as one consistent system (same proportions, shadow, and corner radius) so they can be reused across pages and animated.
